From the Pile on Fr. Kirk's Desk...

In the middle of May, I was able to take some continuing education time within the Redwood Forest of the Santa Cruz Mountains. This clergy retreat focused a lot on our individual stories and the power they have in our personal and professional lives. During my time away, I was faced with questions like: What part of my story did I write for myself? (internal desire) What part of my story did someone else write for me? (external pressures) What part of my story did life in general write for me? (it just happened)

Since I now realize that I have a significant amount of work to do in this area of my life, I won't use my story as an example. So...What if you wanted to become a lawyer and be a partner in your family's law firm? You made the decision on your own to get your law degree. During your last semester you realized that you really didn't want to be a lawyer. But influenced by the spoken and unspoken pressures of your family, you joined the family business even though you knew it was not for you. You end up working in the family business for 15 years, but it never felt right and it slowly ate at your soul.

In this scenario you started out writing your own story which was a good thing, but later the family began writing your story for you. Illness, injuries, tornadoes, wild fires, and "down sizing" are things that "life" might write for us; those types of things that are out of our control.

Some would say that God writes our story for us, but that's too predestinational or "puppet on a string for me." If God writes our story for us, then we no longer have the free will of choice. I think God gives us what we need to write our own stories, and then walks with us to either reinforce our story, or help us pick up the pieces in order to continue moving forward when the story we've chosen takes a wrong turn.

As I begin processing my experience of the retreat, I keep coming back to the importance of being authentic within our own stories. If we are not being authentic in our stories, then we are not being authentic to whom God created. God created us to be uniquely authentic, and when we don't allow ourselves to live in that uniqueness, we are not honoring God.

When we are born, we are as authentic to God as possible, but then outside pressures get in the way. It is time for us to embrace who God made and do all we can to become authentic once again.

Now we are faced with some questions: What part of your story did you write for yourself? (internal desire) What part of your story did someone else write for you? (external pressures) What part of your story did life in general write for you? (it just happened)

How can you, with God's help, begin to intentionally write your own story as authentically as God created you?

Peace,

Fr. Kirk

Ministry of the Month

Last month we celebrated our music ministries. This month we are focusing our attention on our ministries of stewardship.

Not only will we be blessing our stewardship committee, but we will be celebrating and blessing our members whose ministries involve preserving our buildings and grounds, and mother earth.

Church Gossip: 1/8 Venting; 7/8 Practical Pointers

Beneath this headstone
A lump of clay,
Lies Arbela Young
Who, on the 24th of May
Began to hold her tongue.

English epitaph quoted by Charles Swindoll in Killing Giants, Pulling Thorns

Let every person be quick to listen, slow to speak, slow to anger. For anger does not accomplish God's righteousness If someone believes he is religious but does not bridle his tongue, and so deceives his heart, his religion is futile.

James 1: 19-20, 26

There was a notably healthy moment in a recent meeting of the Ministry Development Commission. Unrelated to the topic of the meeting, one person asked me, "Is it true you have closed our church in Tonopah?" I truly am not telling this story to vent (well not just to vent), but to teach a point I hope will be helpful in our congregations.

"No," I said. "I did not close our church in Tonopah." I went on to explain that St. Mark's has for several years had an Average Sunday Attendance of 2, that there are a 4 people who attend on occasion – 2 of them actually keep the church running. Those 2, the doers, have moved to Henderson. Before moving, they called a congregational meeting to ask the other members to take over. The other members declined. I am doing my level best to recruit a priest from out of state to move to Tonopah to revitalize our work there. As I understand Episcopal polity, bishops do not close churches. What happens in Tonopah is up to the Standing Committee, but we are doing our best for the mission in Central Nevada. I am quite hopeful we will see new life in coming months.

I explained all this, but the person who rightly asked the question, told me that the word on the street is "The bishop closed Tonopah." And it was fairly clear, after my explanation, that others on the Committee still suspected I was somehow behind the closing of that congregation. They had heard it on the street, in the pews, the sacristy, or the parish parking lot. Where there is smoke, there is fire, right? And so the suspicion will be a little bit greater among small rural churches that the bishop wants to close them because they are small and rural. There is also a suspicion among large urban churches that I want to close them because they are large and urban – but that's another story.

Moral: rumors undermine the church. In this case, small congregations are made to feel threatened and devalued. Suspicions of conspiracy spread. Trust is eroded. Some people don't trust me because they think I am a church killer; I don't trust some people because they may be the ones spreading the rumors. Since I don't know who is actually saying these things, I am apt to suspect people who are perfectly innocent. A little chunk of ice is thereby dropped into our relationship. The few spreading the rumor understand each other to be the good guys sitting in judgment on the bad guy or bad guys. And so the church is divided between the ostensibly good and the ostensibly evil. The opportunity to join in such rumor-mongering is enticing. It has an energy to it almost as delicious as scandal.

I tell my own story because I know it best and am free to relate it in more detail without compromising anyone else. But I am not a special target. This is how we often treat each other. I once met with a church group that was uniformly angry at a particular person. They were mostly angry about things they had heard he said or did. As to most of the allegations, I had no personal knowledge of what actually happened. But as to those events I did know about, the version of facts the group was angry about differed significantly from what the eye witnesses had told me. In a few cases, the group was in sync with the version of the story told by one person but not by the other. Ultimately, the facts did not matter as much as the story that was told. The version people repeat and the version people choose to believe has the power to build up the community or to tear it down.

I cannot count how many people I have known who were driven out of churches by gossip. The congregation almost always loses the person who is the target of the gossip and it usually loses a few more as collateral damage. Gossip is an effective way to keep the church small – and yes there are those in almost every congregation who like to keep the group small enough to be cozy, and in some cases, small enough they can control it. The agenda (usually unconscious) to drive people out and disrupt community is, in my experience, the most common reason people start negative rumors. Sometimes those motives cause people to repeat them – but more often, the repeaters and spreaders of rumors are even more unconscious. They are caught up in the energy of being in the know and letting others in on the secret. Such sharing creates a pathological but seductive intimacy. “How beautiful upon the mountain are feet of the bearers of good news” (Isaiah 52: 7) but “popular in the valley are the faces of the bearers of bad news and dark acts.”

So what to do about it all? If one is inclined to start or spread destructive rumors in the church, it would be better for that person’s emotional and spiritual health that they hit the pause button to check their motives. The problem James cites with rumor-mongers is that they “deceive their own hearts.” If one really wants to split a community, undermine a spiritual leader, cast the church in a bad light, then they should fire away, take their best shot – but do it consciously, with intentionality. Another option would be to look back to the source of their anger, find what is really bothering them, and go to the person who has offended them and look for some resolution. By the grace of God, that is possible. I have seen it happen.

And when we hear the rumor, what then? The member of the Ministry Development Committee did a very healthy thing. First, she checked the facts. Second, she let the person targeted by the rumor know what is being said and give him (me) a chance to respond. Here are some steps a rumor recipient might take if they want build up the family of God and strengthen the mission.

1. Ask the rumor spreader the source of the information; and go check the facts.
2. Ask the rumor spreader what his or her purpose is in sharing this information with you.
3. Urge the rumor spreader to talk directly with the target of the rumor.
4. Talk to the target of the rumor yourself to let them know who is saying what about them. The secrecy of gossip is poison to the community; so shine a light on it.
5. Notice any urge you may have to join in the gossip game, check what it is you might get out of it, and ask yourself if there is a less destructive way to meet that need.
6. Take the rumor, the rumor monger, and the target of the rumor all into prayer. Pray for truth and reconciliation in the community. Pray for your own serenity and differentiation in the midst of the challenge.

Senior Warden's Report

Welcome summer (although as I write this we are getting snow in the mountains)! Spring just doesn't want to let go!

I hope you like to come to events coordinated around food! We will have our first summer food event on June 10th at the Bibby's Deep Pit Barbecue. The monies raised from this event will pay for the lighting in the music area. Potlucks will be held on the following dates. There have been some changes!

- July 1: Potluck in celebration of Bishop Dan's annual visit to the parish.
- July 29: Monthly Potluck
- August 26: Monthly Potluck

We will be having a great music presentation on June 22nd with the VooDoo Dogz. This event is open to the public and is a fund raiser for parish needs. Please come and bring your friends.

Last month I suggested that you review your income tax records from last year to see if your charitable giving was in your desired range. Dan and I strive to keep our total amount at 10%. Your parish's financial situation has not significantly changed from the presentation made at the Annual Meeting. The vestry is still striving to achieve sustainable funding for our parish. It takes all of us working together. If you have any budget questions, you may contact me, Bob Bibby, Dick Stufflebeam, or Fr. Kirk.

We are sad to see Neal Long move on to other music adventures. We wish him well in his future in music as we know it will be very promising. We welcome Aren Long who will play for the traditional summer services. Fr. Kirk and I are preparing a position description for the organist's position. We will be announcing the position in the paper and with the American Guild of Organists. If you know someone who might be interested, please have them contact the church office for an application. Our goal is to have an organist hired by the fall.

Many thanks to those of you who were able to come on May 22 and work on the Junior Warden's projects. We were able to clean up the back and south sides of the parish hall and do some inside work.

Have a safe and enjoyable summer.

Junior Warden's Report

Thanks to all that helped on Work Day. We accomplished a great deal.

Our annual Deep Pit BBQ is scheduled for Sunday, June 10th after the 10am service.

Menu includes Deep Pit meat, Salad, Rolls, Macaroni Salad, Beans and dessert. This year the proceeds are going towards the new lighting over the Choir and Praise Team. A Vendor bid came in at $2,375 and Mel was able to complete the same work for $1,380. Extra lighting over the organ and Praise Team added $258 to that total. Vestry approved the expense with reimbursement to come from BBQ ticket sales. Mel did a great job and saved us, at a minimum, $1,000. Tickets are available after each service and also at the door. $15.00 for Adults $5.00 Child. Get your tickets early so we know how much to prepare.
